There are many interesting points: Don't just remember what you've learned, .In a sign of how quickly the Internet of Things is taking over our lives, a Google engineer has developed a fridge that tells you what it is hungry for. In a video posted Tuesday, Google software engineer Kate Wagner shows off a prototype for a refrigerator that says when it's hungry for food based on how much the owner has stocked in their fridge. "Go make me some Cheerios," the fridge says. "Here are the Cheerios I want you to make me. Come back to me when you're done. I don't have much time." Wagner calls the fridge "Hangry." She tweeted the video on Monday, with the caption "Refrigerator tells you what it wants when you're busy cooking and it wants you to make it food so it won't get lonely." Wagner is the head of the "Fridge Nearby" project, which is part of Google's self-driving car effort. Wagner's post came after a recent video of a German woman went viral. Evelyn, who wants to be identified only as the young woman in the video, filmed her microwave letting her know
